There have been instances of strikes in which their wer has been brought to a strong test, nd in some of these cases the contest has esulted in the defeat of the laboring class, and a great loss both to the capitalists and the laborers. The late coal strike was signal instance of this result, in which the oss on both sides, caused by the suspension of work managed by the protective union among the miners, amounted to upwards o ten millions of dollars. The strike in Pall liver, a year or two ago, resulted in a similar discomfiture, greatly to the disadvantage

The average this year is Probably as great as ever, but all accounts make the grain flinty and scant. The same drought spoiled pasturage, and so reduced the yield of hay that the bulky commodity must be imported.

PLANTS FOR ORNAMENTAL

Perhaps the title of my article may be a trifle ambiguous. I should have said, ornamental foliage plants.

People's fanoy runs a good deal to the tropical in farm gardening, of late years; and the result of this newly acquired taste is certainly very striking and effective. But the high price of plants used in this subtropical style of gardening, prohibits their introduction into the gardens of the poorer classes.

grower, and reaches ten and fifteen feet in a season. It has immense dark colored leaves, often measuring two feet in width. These leaves are borne on long stalks. The plant branches freely, and bears long tuits in conspicuous blossoms. A full grown plant, or group of plants, standing out boldly in a lewn or yard, is very attractive.

Perilla Nankinensis is fine for groups.

"Because it pleases me."

"Well, then," said the officer, "take up your flute again, or it will please me to throw you into the water."

The composer, seeing that the dialogue was unpleasant to the ladies he was with, gave way, and began playing again. When leaving his boat, however, he accosted the bold son of Mars, and said:

"Sir, the fear of annoying the people who were with memade melbrook your insolence; but to-morrow I will have entire satisfaction. We can meet in Hyde Park at ten o'clock. If you have no objection, we will fight with swords; we need no seconds; the quarrel is only between you and me, and it is quite useless to bring in strangers."

The officer socepted the challenge. He was at the rendezwous at the appointed hour, and met Weber as agreed on. He drew his aword, and put himself on guard, when Weber presented a pistol at his throat.

"Do you mean to murder me?" said the officer."

"No," said Weber, "but be kind enough

The want of ability to sleep well is an indication of impaired health which demands prompt attention. As a remedy for this, Dr. Hall recommends that present associations be broken up, whatever may be the sacrifies; that some more active employment be undertaken; or a long journey be taken on horseback, if possible, and with a good a companion. A great specific is to be vigorously employed in the open air a large portion of the time.
